Shultz Says the U.S. May Tie Length of Treaty to SDI Tests

By Frank Swoboda
Washington Past Service

WASHINGTON -Socretary of willing to compromise any part of the Strategic Defense Initiative, hinted Sunday that the United States might be willing to consider a longer nonwithdrawal period as part of any new anti-ballistic missile treaty with the Soviet Union.

Mr. Shultz was responding to a report in The Washington Post that officials of both the State Department and the Defense Department had concluded that the limits on SDI testing being sought by the Soviet Union would interfere with only a handful of technological tests from now to 1995. They are said to have concluded that it might be possible to negoti-ate limits on the testing without fatally compromising the program. Mr. Shultz, in a televised interview program, talked of the need for a period of predictability as part of a new ABM treaty.

"One method of providing the predictability and stability that both sides want," he said, "is to have a period in which we agree not to withdraw from the ABM treary or to exercise our right of a six-month notice or to deploy."

Moscow is seeking a 10-year nonwithdrawal period in the new treaty as a way of keeping the United States from testing any of its research on the Strategic Defense Initiative. The United States has Mr. Shultz appeared Sunday to be signaling a willingness to extend that period as part of the negotiations over the program. He said the need for a period of State George P. Takeshita Signals Activist Role Abroad

By Patrick L. Smith TOKYO — Although Prime Minister Noboru Takeshita's first speech to the Japanese parliament on Friday focused on domestic issues, many analysts also viewed it as a strong indication of the new Japanese leader's intention to take an activist approach to forcign affairs. The analysts also said that in linking political and economic reforms at home to the nation's relations abroad, Mr. Takeshita was signaling Western allies and Asian neighbors that he would continue the outward-looking policies of his predecessor, Yasu-hiro Nakasone. But while he intended to reassure other nations, the prime minister's address was also a reminder that managing Japan's relations with the rest of the world was likely to prove his most formidable challenge.

Mr. Takeshita, who took office earlier this month, has been widely seen as a domestically oriented politician who holds the traditional values of the Japanese village in highest esteem.

Accordingly, the prime minister has sought to dispel the im-

Maintenance

New York Times Service

NEW YORK — A special government inspection of Eastern Airlines in June found that its practices on postponing aircraft repairs was a "misuse" of federal policy and that pressures on Eastern's crews posed a potential safety hazard, a government report says.

Under a federal policy, airlines are allowed to postpone mainte-nance or repairs in some circum-stances. But the government, in a report on the results of the June nspection, said Easiern stretched its interpretation of the policy to the point that maintenance on curtain items would be subject to "the availability of ground time, parts

If Loot Is Confiscated Who Pays the Lawyer?

It used to be, no maner how illgotten a suspect's gains might lat-er prove to be, they could always be spent on a lawyer. The lawyer was always free to take the money and keep it. But federal prosecu-tors have begun to contend that legal fees should not be held sac-rosanct if the money can be traced to illegal sources, The New York Times reports. Criminal lawyers reply that this undermines constitutional guarantees to counsel.

The debate stems from the Federal Comprehensive Forfeiture Act of 1983, which empowers prosecutors to seize and freez a suspect's funds before trial Once guilt is established, prose-cutors can recoup almost any-thing purchased with such funds, including fees already paid to at-Some argue that what the con-

As a federal district judge, David Edelstein, once put it, "In the same manner that a defendant cannot obtain a Rolls-Royce with the fruits of a crime, he cannot be permitted to obtain the services of the Rolls-Royce of attorneys from these same tainted funds."

The constitutionality of the law may well be determined in the current case of U.S. vs. Monsanto. Shortly after Peter Monsanto was arrested on heroin charges, the government im-pounded two houses it said were bought with drug money. Mr. Monsanto was instantly impoverished, and his lawyer quit the case, which is yet to be decided.

Mush From the Wimps

This Monday, Congress and the administration start trying to keep their timid promise to cut the federal budget deficit by a token $30 billion. Just how timid and just how token can be gauged by comparing their promise with the economic plan that Jimmy Carter proposed in his last year in office. Here is bow the lead story in The Times described it on March 15, 1980:

President Carter, declaring that the na-tion's soaring inflation rate required a program of "pain" and "discipline," announced today that he would cut federal spending by $13 billion to achieve a balanced budget next year and that he would impose an immediate fee on imported oil aimed at raising gasoline prices 10 cents a gallon.

tuny Carter was fighting double-digit inflation, and all this seemed little and late. An editorial in The Boston Globe first appeared with a joke headline: "Mush From the Wimp." That was quickly revised to "All Must Share the Burden." The country has, since then, learned more about musi and wimps, and burdens. Mr. Carter didn't get his spending cut, even with a Democratic Congress. Still, two things stand out in a then-and-now comparison.

First, note that it would then have taken only $13 billion in cuts to balance the budget. Now the gap is 10 times higher. If Congress comes up with all the supposed $30 billion reduction, the 1988 deficit will still run more than $130 billion. And even this lings law would have gone into effect, requiring across the board cuts with no discretion. For weeks that harsh law looked like a shark in the water, to be avoided at all costs. It ended up looking more like a lifeboat. Without its deadlines, the negotiators might well have dithered on indefinitely.

Second, note that President Carter at least tried. He was willing to ask for pain, discipline and a 10-cent gas tax. What is President Reagan willing to ask for? Nothing. He was willing, grudgingly at that, to bargain with Congress. And now, even after agreeing to spending cuts and revenue increases, he brandishes veto threats.

The agreed-on package is not deficit re-duction, only an outline of proposals that could bring reductions, of the supposed $30 billion in 1988 and $46 billion in 1989. Those figures include dubious, fuzzy and one-time amounts. The negotiators, acting together, could have made genuinely constructive reductions, like restraining Social Security in-creases for the well-to-do. Having failed to do so creates pressure on programs that literally put food in the mouths of the poor.

Congress and the administration could yet flesh out their outline into a real program, recognizing that all must share the burden. So far, with the president still so passive and House Democrats still so skit-tish, America's leaders are breathing new, plural life into Mush from the Wimps.

- THE NEW YORK TIMES.

So Who's Protectionist?

The Massachusetts Institute of Technology went shopping for a supercomputer this year, solicited bids and found that the two most attractive were for Japanese-made machines, Before it could conclude a deal, though, it got a letter from Bruce Smart, the ecretary of commerce for international trade, warning that the Japanese products might be subject to anti-dumping legislation and, thus, added duties on the price. MIT got the point, and so did the companies, which withdrew their bids. MIT has now put its supercomputer plans temporarily on hold.

Did the low Japanese offer constitute "dumping?" In fact, it is widespread practice for computer companies in America and abroad to offer attractive start-up deals to universities. The benefits of training a generation of academic scientists on one's own system, rather than on a competitor's, are obvious. Selling or leasing a supercomputer to MIT would not only put a company's system on display, it would also mean a generation's worth of software written for that system by some of the world's best scientific minds. The Commerce Department is worried lest the U.S. supercomputer industry lose its technological edge over Japan — an edge that lies more in software than in machine power — in a worldwide supercomputer market that is expected to grow enormously. That the department would lean a little on MIT to buy American is therefore not too surprising.

It is, however, a little embarressing. Just lest summer Washington concluded a tough agreement in which the Japanese reluctantly opened their government procurement pro-includes the universities - to allow American supercomputers to compete on a fair basis. At the time, the United States could plausibly argue that its procurement process followed the same rules, since the military is required by statute to pick the cheapest bid. Recently, though, when the Defense Department was found to have adhered to that policy and bought Japanese machines for budgetary reasons, people on the Hill kicked up a fuss, causing defense officials to declare their procedure to be "under review."

There are some respects in which the U.S. companies that make only supercomputers are at a disadvantage when bidding against the broader-based Japanese companies, which can take a loss on one product to break into a market. Rather than confronting such questions, supercomputer companies have let the government apply buy-American pressure on their behalf. Free market forces are supposed to induce com-panies in such a situation to explore ways of competing more effectively, whether by grouping into consortia, as some high-tech afacturers are experimentally doing, or by making their products more attractive abroad, as IBM, for example, has successfully done. By contrast, depriving research universities of the equipment they them-selves have determined represents the right ratio of price to capability is a peculiar way of ensuring continued technological domi-nance. It is equally bad for America's reputation for the kind of fair play it demands from its trading competitors.

ment has no domestic constituency and is therefore vulnerable to ruinous congressional budgetary cuts. But the department does have a constituency, although it is amorphous and diffuse. Every American traveler abroad is a constituent; so is every travel agent and every international airline. All who do business abroad are constituents: so is everyone who is involved in telecommunications, or foreign imports, sales or royalties. So is every American citizen who thinks of foreign policy as the shield of the republic. All these constituencies should be roaring with outrage, espe-cially at a Congress whose Democratic leaders miss no opportunity to fault President Reagan for neglecting diplomacy.

For starters there is Japan, where the rising yen has tempted thousands to visit America, a fine way to reduce the U.S. trade deficit. For lack of personnel, the lines at U.S. consular offices in Tokyo stretch for blocks. Letters and articles in the Japanese press wonder whether the United States is State must absorb an $84 million shortfall imposed by Congress — this after bru-tal cuts in two successive budgets. In that time, the department has also lost millions in buying power because of the 40 percent decline in the dollar's value.

Congressional slashers have an answer They claim that State is miserably mismanaged and that its projected cut of 1,270 jobs is deliberately meant to stir alarm. But this claim ignores Congress's own micromanage ment of State's budget; it imposes priorities —so much for embassy security, so much for new staff jobs —and then assails the department for "needlessly" closing consulates.

It's a shame. And a folly, since a big power's first line of defense is its diplomatic agents. Americans who rely on overseas offices of the State Department ought to raise their voices against a know-nothing assault by a Democratic Congress.

Turkey Sooner or Later

Turkey is an issue that the whole of the European Community wishes would just go away. It won't, and [this Sunday's] election won't make it any the more likely that it will. The election is there both to confirm Prime Minister Turgut Ozal in power and to legitimize Turkey's progress to democracy and hence to eventual membership of the EC.

It isn't democracy, of course, or not yet democracy as the rest of Europe might understand it. The timing of the election, the attempts to ban opponents, the continued imprisonment and torture of opponents of the regime are all there to buttress the case of those who would deny Turkey's place as part of Western Europe. But that is the very last reason for openly spurning Turkey's request for membership or for pouring scorn on its efforts to democracy. Those efforts are real. Turkey deserves, on grounds of practical politics as much as idealism, to be drawn more closely into Western Europe -all the more so as the agreement on intermediate nuclear forces reemphasizes conventional defense and the specter of American disengagement.

In bringing Greece into the EC the other members have made it difficult to refuse Turkey but impossible to accept her, given Greece's right of veto. Better to accept Turkish membership as a long-term aim but a short-term improbability. But then it becomes all the more essential to tie Turkey into economic arrangements and to encourage her along the civil path she is now pursuing, - The Observer (London).

The Hunt Is On for the Real George Bush

WASHINGTON — Vice President George Bush, who inspires jokes on television and satire in sophisticated comic strips, this year is also stimulating political journalists to produce some of the best biographical essays ever done about a presidential candidate.

Perhaps the most remarkable profile, in its depth, was written by Barry Bearak, Miami bureau chief of the Los Angeles Times, and on Nov. 22 occupied more than four full pages in that newspaper. A month earlier, Margaret Garrard Warner wrote an insightful cover story on Mr. Bush for Newsweek magazine. Back in October 1986, Walt Harrington broke much of the Bush trail in a profile for The Washington Post Magazine, and there have been other good ones as well. These character studies reject the easy Bush caricature. "George Bush is no wimp," Mr. Bearak writes, "certainly not in any sense of cowardice. On the contrary, he is astonishingly resilient and persevering. Nor has he been untrue to his own sense of political ethics," to the val-

That rearing, in the security of wealth and social position embodied in the landmarks of his formative years, Greenwich, Kennebunkport, Andover and Yale, is light-years removed from the life experiences of most people in the nation he seeks to lead, it gives him what Mr. Harrington calls an "Old Worldly" air. "Born of this century, George Bush embodies much from the last," Mr. Bearak writes in his eloquent conbearak whites in his eloquent con-cluding paragraph. "He is a man of so much hesitance, yet a man always forging ahead — a man steadled by the voices of a simple and privileged world chanting inside him."

Those voices — most important the war, he and his wife, Barbara, took off for Texas but spiritually never left home. Essentially uninterested in abstract ideas or theories, Mr. Bush has "never been immuta-bly tied to the great currents of his time," Mr. Harrington observes.

He also has been singularly free of the self-doubt which breeds skeptical reflection or introspection. To search for a core of philosophy or belief in such a man, all three conclude, is fruitless. The point of the political quest for Mr. Bush is the quest itself, honorably pursued. Public service is for him, as for his financier/senator father, as much an obligation as good manners. He has serenely survived many lumiliations in a long political career, sustained by the af-fection he evokes without effort not only from family members but also from the hundreds, even thousands, of friends who warm themselves in his benign personality.

The profiles make clear that Mr.

erence. The central mystery is what standards would surface once he had satisfied his ambition by becoming president and no longer had anyone to whom he must defer.

He would be civil modest and considerate. But what else? On what issues of principle would a President Bush stake, or even sacrifice, his popularity? His record gives no real clues, so the question must be pressed in the coming campaign.

Ray Walker, a psychiatrist-cousin with no special foundess for Mr. Bush, and who appears memorably in Mr. Bearak's profile, suggests that Mr. Bush would strive to please pub-lic opinion but, equally, to gain the approval of his chosen political advisers. That means that close attention must be paid not only to the competence and character of those advisers but to the range of their advisers but to the range of their experience and the breadth and diversity of their backgrounds. Campaigning to Republican audiences and consulting with world leaders, which is mostly what Mr. Bush has done for the last third of his life, does not guarantee a clear grasp of the reality of people's lives.

It wishs not be a bed idea to all.

It might not be a bad idea to ask Mr. Bush, at every opportunity, questions designed to test how much of that outside reality has penetrated the protective layers of personal sethe profilers depict at the heart of his extraordinary life. It is as important that he know us as that we know him. The Washington Post.

HE quintessential team player, George Bush is indistinguishable from the team. By temperament, that is his very impulse. He is not in government so much to lead as to serve. He is politic, cautious and glad to be of use. A genteel upbringing has left its enduring stamp. His deep devotion is to good conduct, not the power of ideas. deep devotion is to good conduct, not the power of ideas. His urge is to accommodate, his great gift to blend in.

And it is the darudest thing, for what a singular life!

Chapter by chapter, it is epic stuff. Top athlete. War hero. Yale man. Wildcatter. Millionaire. Off into politics. George Bush, born to privilege and blessed with ability, has lived what others merely dream.

Where many politicians have to manufacture and reinvent themselves, Mr. Bush is the genuine article.

He was a star baseball player while Ronald Reagan only played one in the movies. He was a daring fighter pilot in the Pacific while Reagan flew simulated missions on the back lots of Culver City.

Mr. Bush has been married to the same woman for 42 years and has five children who adore him; Mr. Reagan is divorced, with children he rarely sees. Mr. Bush is a is divorced, with children he rarely sees. Mr. Bush is a devoted churchgoer; Mr. Reagan seldom feels the need. Yet it is Mr. Reagan who so naturally marches in step to the cadences of God, family and country; who is the courageous sheriff busting through the saloon doors to meet a dare. And it is George Herbert Walker Bush, seven years the faithful sidekick, who is maligned for merely tagging along — George Bush who is reviled from the left and the right as a lap dog, a preppy and a wimp.

Throw Out the Case Against Nuclear Disarmament

N EW YORK — The start toward real disarmament was made at the summit meeting in Reykjavík in October last year when Ronald Reagan and Mikhail Gorbachev discussed accepting 1996 as the target date for the abolition of all nuclear arms. There has been speculation about their motives. One possible explanation is not given enough attention: that they might be uinely frightened by the prospect of a unclear war, no matter how remote the chance.

Meanwhile, many proponents of the nuclear arms race maintain their line.

Does deterrence work? Its adherents believe that it is the existence of nuclear weapons which has preserved the peace between the great powers since 1945. That cannot be proved, but there are some strong arguments in favor. Peace would perhaps have been preserved in any event, but that would be even harder to prove. The central argument of the supporters of nuclear weapons can therefore possibly be conceded as correct. A fallacy remains the assumption that what has happened before will persist indefinitely. It ignores the many risks involved in the nuclear arms race. In a way it is like playing Russian roulette. Instead of the world being safer the longer it has been at peace, it might be the other way round. The past success of deterrence cannot determine future success.

Deterrence cannot exclude the risk of accidental war. That risk may be very small in a statistical sense, but it is greater than zero and is increasing.

If the policy of deterrence were applied to crimefighting, one could imagine a police chief planting

By Bernt Carlsson

explosives, all linked to a central push-button control, throughout a city. If a crime occurred anywhere, the whole city would be blown up. When 40 days without crime had passed, it might be taken as proof that crime had disappeared. If later the chief had only the unenviable choice be-later the chief had only the menviable choice berween blowing up the city or letting everyone see that the deterrence mechanism was a fake, the police might be forced at great expense to revert to conventional patrolling. A first step might be to modify the system to one of flexible response: blowing up only those parts of the city in which crime occurred.

It has been argued that the abolition of mediumrange missiles would pull several rungs from the ladder of possible responses to aggression. Mediumrange missiles are a more credible deterrent than long-range strategic massiles, it is said, and fewer long-range strategic missiles, it is said, and fewer missiles means fewer options. It is somehow thought that the Soviet Union would be more willing to accept the destruction of Moscow by a mediumrange missile launched from Western Europe than by a strategic missile from North America. This ignores a basic maxim of Clausewitz that in war the will is directed at an animate object that reacts. It can safely be assumed that if a missile is heading for Moscow, whether strategic or mediumrange, the remaining minutes of Washington D.C. and command structures function.

disarmament is that it would upset the military balance in Europe, where the Warsaw Pact has such superiority in conventional weapons.

Soviet conventional superiority was built up during the 1945-1950 era of U.S. nuclear monopoly. Western Europe was to be held hostage by the threat of invasion as a deterrent against the U.S. nuclear amperiority. Subsequently the Soviet conventional superiority was given as the reason for the dependence of the West on nuclear weapons as a deterrence against the perceived Soviet conven-tional threat. A vicious circle was established.

At the global level, given the vast land boundaries of the Soviet Union, the alleged Soviet conventional superiority is somewhat mythical. But in view of the considerable current edge in numbers in Europe, it is astonishing that a populous and advanced entity such as Western Europe should not be able to match the Warsaw Pact in conventional forces. One frequent argument in Western Europe is that nuclear weapons are chesper than the alternative of conventional arms. The cost factor really is the most irrelevant of arguments in discussions of nuclear strategy. What price is reasonable to avoid nuclear war? To set cost against the end of humanity is really the most absurd and repugnant argument. It is the ultimate irresponsibility.

The writer, a former international secretary of the Swedish Social Democratic Party, is United Nations are numbered, assuming that Soviet early warning commissioner for Namibia. He contributed this comad command structures function.

The Drift to Denuclearization Is Well Under Way

By Edward N. Luttwak This is the first of two articles.

WASHINGTON — For once, the importance of an arms con-trol deal is not being overstated. Last week's INF agreement is important for a much greater reason than the withdrawal of a few hundred warbeads. It marks, I believe, the beginning of a "post-nuclear" era, whose different strategic dangers are being ignored as the two sides argue over the details of verification.

Thousands of modear weapons may remain in this post-nuclear world, but they will no longer provide a realistic option for defending Europe, nor off-set the weakness of U.S. conventional forces elsewhere in the world. For this reason, Americans may have reason to regret the passing of the nuclear era, for all its obvious dangers. The decline in the importance of nuclear weapons does not stem from the development of other, more pow-erful weapons. Nor does it reflect the recent growth in Soviet nuclear capabilities. Rather, it is a continuation of trends that have been evident for 20 years, ever since NATO replaced the strategy of massive retaliation with one of flexible response. This was the first great reduction in the role of nuclear weapons within the U.S.-Soviet military balance. Nuclear weapons were now to be kept in reserve in the event of imminent non-nuclear defeat. Interestingly enough, flexible response was imposed on NATO at the very time when the superiority of U.S. intercontinental nuclear forces was at its peak, by every criterion of measurement. The Polaris forces of 41 submarines with 656 ballistic missiles had just been completed and America possessed a force of 1,000 Minuteman missiles as against far fewer and much inferior Soviet sea- and land-based ballistic missiles. The U.S. advantage in manned bombers was even greater. If the balance in the respective destructive capacities had been the determining factor, 1967 should have witnessed a reaffirmation of massive retaliation rather than its repudiation. U.S. and NATO strategies have not changed officially in the past 20 years. But the role of nuclear weap-ons has relentlessly declined, and spending for non-nuclear forces has increased sharply. Why? Nothing has changed in the physical realm, but everything has changed be-cause mentalities have changed. Public perceptions of the threat inherent in tion mark. But the trend is clear Soviet military power as unlimited in enough. There, as everywhere else, the scope (a threat to "our way of life") political plausibility of extended dehave gradually given way to a less terrence against conventional threats threatening geopolitical conception—is diminishing. The apparent U.S. in which such and such Soviet forces readiness to use nuclear weapons are seen as capable of invading this or that theater of war. Accordingly, the response deemed appropriate these days is also more discrete. The drift to de facto denucleariza-tion has exposed the political implansibility of the various U.S. miclear guarantees, which are intended to dissuade foes from conventional attack by threatening an American nuclear response. Consider some examples:

 Until 1985, Quemoy and Matsu islands claimed by Taiwan off the Chinese mainland — were to be held by nuclear counterattacks against non-nuclear Chinese artillery barrages under joint U.S.-Republic of China defense plans. At present, the notion that America would use nuclear weapons to defend Ouemoy and Matsa seems absurd, but it was not so for the U.S. officials who approved those plans in the 1950s — although they might now look back in disbelief at their thoughts of those days.

· The demolearization drift probably has progressed far enough to rule out the use of nuclear weapons for the defense of South Korea against a nonnuclear invasion from the north. That was still seen as a realistic contingency in the 1960s, and a definite reliance on nuclear weapons was not eliminated from U.S.-Republic of Korea defense plans until well into the 1970s. Japan is still to be defended by nuclear weapons if its non-nuclear defense fails. Public discourse on the "nuclear umbrella" mostly refers to the dissussion of a Soviet nuclear attack. But that may not be the real threat, given the acute vulnerability of Hokkaido, the northernmost Japanese island to a non-nuclear invasion from nearby Soviet territory. It is hard to believe that a U.S. president would authorize nuclear attacks against Soviet forces in response to a non-nuclear invasion of Hokkaido, or that such attacks would be acceptable to Ameri-against a non-unclear invasion was greater in the past than it is now, and it is almost certainly greater now than it will be in the future. The best index of denuclearization at any one time is the size, quality and cost of the non-nuclear armed forces that the United States and the European members of the Atlantic alliance see fit to maintain. In the 1950s. the various potential fronts northern Norway, in Italy and in eastern Turkey, as well as the central front in Germany from the Baltic to the Austrian border - were held only by scattered units to be deployed in long, thin lines. They provided a very poor defense against concentrated ar-mored thrusts, but they were ideal to trigger the nuclear bon the Soviet Union, which was the envisaged response to invasion at that time. Since then, NATO ground forces have grown in size and arma-ment and their logistic capacity for sustained combat has increased.

The very fragility of the alliance defenses of the 1950s added to the credibility of massive retaliation. Similarly, the continuing increase in the capacity and sustainability of NATO combat capabilities not only signals but also promotes the continu vance of denuclearization. That is because the "robust" defenses that the European allies are forever being asked to provide would merely slow an invasion long enough to allow European parliaments and the U.S. Congress time to debate whether nuclear weapons should be used. That debate would produce only one answer: the exclusion of any use PARIS - M. Poincaré, the French

But their unprecedented accumulation of non-nuclear combat forces is the best possible indicator of non-nuclear intentions. This is not a case of Mania Europe telling her two overgrown and loutish neighbors to make nice. Europe's support for the ABM treaty as "the cornerstone" of arms control is based on strong self-interest rather than high moral principle.

The theory behind the ABM treaty was that neither the Soviet Union nor the United States could build a completely effective anti-missile screen.

Each superpower could field enough new missiles to overwhelm the other's interceptor systems, and the inevitable race to puncture the screen was seen as dangerously destabilizing.
But the Soviet Union, without the restraints of the ABM treaty, could build an anti-missile system that could contain the medium-sized nuclear art senals of Britain and France. These countries also share West Germany's fear that American and Soviet generals armed with missile-interceptor sys-tems for their countries might be more tempted than they are now to try to light limited wars in Europe. Mr. Gorbachev, who apparently hit it off with Mrs. Thatcher in private in Moscow last March despite her routinely combative public declarations, may be playing for her help not so much at the summit but in the crucial period afterward when the meaning of what he has or has not agreed to with Mr. Reagan is being sorted out.

Like most political compromises, a summit deal beyond the treaty to scrap medium- and shorter-range nudear missiles will not emerge neatly or in clear focus. Policy makers on this side of the Atlantic would be satisfied, the Bonn official suggests, with a joint statement committing the superpowy. ers to continue to observe the treat, for another seven to 10 years, even if it skirts the contentious issue of "parvs. "broad" interpretations. Mr. Reagan would thus not be of quired to abandon his effort to reinterpret the treaty to permit testing and deployment of key elements of his proposed space-based missile shield, the Strategic Defense Initiative. Mr. Gorbachev's insistence that Mr. Reagan formally renounce the broad interpretation of the ABM treaty led to the abrupt adjournment of the Reyk-

But some allied policy makers are beginning to feel that such a Soviet concession might quickly turn out to be more apparent than real, a develop-ment that Mr. Gorbachev appears to have understood. A successful summit ending with a vague but new joint endorsement of the ABM treaty would probably lead quickly to action in Congress to bind the United States to the traditional interpretation of the Nixon-Brezhnev accord. If what German officials are hearing is correct, Mr. Gorbachev will take the high ground in England and in Washington, stressing that he has sig-nificantly moderated the Soviet position on the SDI and the ABM treaty and now needs movement from Mr. Reagan. He will point to having gone from ruling out any research or testing in space to wanting to negotiate with Mr. Reagan what kind of research in space is acceptable, But that approach could backfire it Mr. Reagan concluded that Mr. Gorbachev is on the ropes more than Mr. Reagan is. "This is no time for power plays," says our acquaintance, the German official. "Gorbachev tried it during the visit of George Shultz to Moscow, and the Americans were right to say no deal. He is still strong enough at home to do the same if Reagan pushes him too hard." The Washington Post.

The importance of the Kuwaiti offer and the U.S. response, in the view of a number of Western and Arab officials, is that it focuses attention on the distinction between the narrow U.S. role of escorting the reflagged Kuwaiti tankers and the much larger implicit policy of containing the seven-year Gulf War and protecting Arab Guif states, Kuwait, the official said, had offered to moor an ocean-going barge in territorial waters between its main oil port and the entrance to the port channel. According to Pakistanis and dip-lomats in Islamabad, the trouble over the troops arose when it became clear that they might become embroiled in the tensions between Iran and Saudi Arabia growing out of the Iran-Iraq war. The Saudis are strong backers of Iraq.

One official said Saudi Arabia even indicated that it wanted to use the Pakistani troops to confront Iranian forces directly. But Pakistan, which has a long border with Iran and a 15 percent Shiite population, sees grave dan-gers in confronting Iran. Sandi Arabia has also become more wary of Shiite influence in its own country, notably after the vio-lence on July 31 involving Iranian Shiites during the annual pilgrim-age to Mecca, Saudi Arabia.

Pakistan's role in defending Saudi Arabia is a highly sensitive topic, about which Pakistani military experts and foreign diplomats in Isiamabad are reluctant to comment.

One obstacle is strong objections the consciousness of Western na-tions and their arms experts with "Nuclear weapons are the only thing that gives the U.S.S.R. superpower status," a Western arms spe-cialist said. "Without them, it would be a Third World economy. Another obstacle to further denuclearization in Soviet eves is President Reagan's plan to build a space-based defense shield against nuclear weapons. The Strategic Defense Initiative, commonly called the "star wars" program, is viewed as a major threat to Soviet security since, if successful, it would stop Soviet nuclear weapons from reaching

American soil in retaliation for an American first strike. It also poses a threat to Mr. Gor-bachev's efforts to change the Soviet economy, since any effort to re-spond by developing a Sovies, nuclear-defense system would drain resources needed for overhauling civilian industries. Thus, Mr. Gorbachev has linked cuts in strategic arsenals on both sides to some restrictions in the "star wars"

Despite the attack against heavy-banded military decisions, an un-usual coalition of Soviet military officials has rallied behind the move for deep cuts in nuclear arsenals, indicating strong support of Mr. Gorbachev's policy.

The new defense minister, General Dmitri T. Yazov, publicly sup-ported the intermediate nuclear forces and strategic treaties in a speech on Nov. 7. And the army chief of staff, Marshal Sergei F. Akhromeyev, played a key role in the Geneva negotiations on the intermediate-range missiles treaty...

The shift in the Soviet stance on medium-range missiles since Leo-nid I. Brezhnev's rule offers a rare insight into a Kremlin cost-effectiveness study in the making.

In one of its most disputed decisions, the party leadership under, Mr. Brezhnev began the SS-20 de v ployments in 1976. Despite angry objections from the West, the deployments continued for five years. 1981, in Soviet Europe alone. 243 SS-20s were in place. In Soviet Asia, at least 170 more would eventually be stationed.

The response from the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, apparently not anticipated by the Kremlin, cost Moscow dearly. In London, Bonn and Paris, govern-ments that had displayed a certain sympathy to Soviet politics fell to more conservative ones. Across Europe, anti-war movements with close ties to Moscow fluttered like panetured balloons.

In 1983, NATO began deployments across Western Europe of two new weapons systems - cruise nissiles and Pershing-2s.

Mr. Karpov, the Soviet arms engert, identified the elimination 6. the Pershing-2s, along with the talks, as the main Soviet interest in rushing the intermediate nucliate of tests of Strategic Defense Initiative technology out of dozens envisioned before 1995, according to administration officials.

SDI: U.S. Decides Test Limits Are Not a Major Hurdle

Several officials in the adminisbe possible to negotiate limits on testing without fatally compromising "star wars" research. Admiral Crowe disclosed his view at a secret meeting last month of Mr. Reagan's senior arms control advisers, officials said.

At issue was a Soviet proposal to open negotiations on rules that eral recent speeches that his answer would govern future tests of space-based defenses — for example, a SDI limits remains "no." restriction on the brightness of any laser tested in space to a fraction of Department officials, including the power that would be needed to Paul H. Nitze, a senior arms conshoot down enemy missiles.

At the White House meeting,
Admiral Crowe told Mr. Reagan

that the Soviet proposal was worth

The debate at that meeting was tration, including Admiral William part of a broader disagreement that J. Crowe Jr., the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, think it may face at the summit meeting in Washington: Is there a way for the Reagan administration to satisfy Mr. Gorbachev's demands for some limits on the Strategic Defense Initiative in return for deep cuts in strategic offensive arms? Mr. Reagan has signaled in sevtrol adviser, have privately said serious consideration and should suggest that the two sides are not as not be "dismissed out of hand." far apart as believed.

Although Mr. Reagan was not persuaded, Admiral Crowe directed his staff to begin studying the Soviet proposal, officials said.

The studies found that although the latest Soviet proposal, if accepted, would preclude a few planned SOI tests, dozens could go forward. But the State Department study concluded that the Soviet proposal was nevertheless flawed because some of the methods it proposes for measuring specific tests were un-workable, Moscow has said its proposal is negotiable. Mr. Nitze has long argued that a U.S.-Soviet agreement on what kinds of SDI tests would be permissible would solidify congressional support for the program and smooth the path to an accord on long-range arms, while allowing SDI scientists to pursue most if not all of the research. But other officials, including the new Defense Secretary, Frank C. Carlucci, have insisted any agreement on research limitations could backfire because of uncertainty

Banks Can Run From Risk But They Can't Easily Hide

By CARL CEWIRTZ

International Herald Tribune ARIS — During the heyday of lending to developing countries, commercial bankers drew great comfort from the fact that the loans were at floating rates of interest.

This eliminated what until then had been the classic risk for banks - lending at fixed rates while funding themselves at

As was later made clear, the banks merely avoided the exposure on funding costs to face a much larger risk over repsyment. One lesson from that experience: Risk can be transferred, but

And from that stems the concern of banking supervisors over the array of innovative instruchange rate exposures.

"The new instruments." said the Cross Report issued by the Bank for International Settlements last year, "transfer price or market risk from one economic agent to another, but do not eliminate that risk. And, in the process, they create new credit exposures, and thereby increase the ways in which the default of one borrower can adversely affect others."

In essence, officials worry that collectively financial markets

may be taking greater risks than were originally recognized.

The perceived increase in risk to the international financial system stems largely from the wide diffusion of swaps and the lengthening chain of parties involved in these exchanges of debt obligations for a mutual benefit. Often, the company or institution at the end of the chain has no idea who is going to fulfill the obligation in its name. At the same time, there are questions about whether swaps are priced to adequately reflect the risk. Despite these concerns, not much is known about the swap

It's estimated that 60 to 70 percent of this year's new-issue activity in the Eurobond market is swap-related. But detailed information on who bears this risk and how they weathered the autumn upheaval in financial markets is still vague

Interest rate swaps are believed to be the largest part of the new business. According to the International Swap Dealers Associa-tion, interest rate swaps amounted to $67.6 billion in the second quarter of this year, setting a 12-month total of $227 billion.

INANCIAL institutions in the United States and Asia accounted for all of the volume increase in the second quarter, based on the end-users of the funds, the ISDA reports. Of those classified as counterparties, 54 percent were from outside the United States — 23 percent in Europe, 27 percent in Asia and 4 percent elsewhere, notably from Canada, Financial institutions accounted for 72 percent of interest rate swap volume, corporations for 22 percent and governments and supranationals for 6 percent.

There is no data on currency swaps, although the ISDA plans to survey dealers about that business as well Central bank officials who asked not to be identified said that at first glance they take a certain amount of comfort from the fact that the October upheavals in financial markets produced no contagious loss of confidence in financial institutions. There was no threat to the international financial system.

But these officials caution that this does not mean that the increasing use of swaps is any less a danger to the system than the Cross Report indicated.

The October experience "was less of a system threat thanks to the very strong action taken by central banks massively injecting liquidity and pushing down interest rates," said one official. "If things had been left unattended by central banks, then systemic risk could have been quite large both because the stock prices might have fallen further and interest rates would not have

"We have the means of preventing systemic collapse," this official added. "But that doesn't mean we are not continuing to live in a dangerous world."

Plans are already under way to make swaps a less dangerous business for banks. Next mouth, the Federal Reserve and the Bank of England are to announce an agreement on defining bank capital and setting common risk ratios for such business as interest rate and exchange rate options. The pact is intended to set a standard for other national authorities.

But one consequence of limiting the risk banks can run in writing swap contracts may be to drive the business outside the relatively tightly regulated banking system to other, less-regulated financial institutions such as securities houses and insurance companies. The deals could even move outside the financial sector altogether to corporate financial departments or to indi-

Move on Montedison Crowns Raul Gardini's Rise

But Tough Job Is Seen for Man Who Would Be King

MILAN — Raul Gardini's aggressive move to oust Mario Schimberni as chief executive of Montedison SpA, the chemicals giant, caps a meteoric rise to the top of Italy's financial establishment.

Mr. Gardini, 54, who is chairman of the huge agribusiness company Gruppo Ferruzzi, was known two years ago only as the head of a sleepy, family business started by his father-in-law, Serafino Ferruzzi, in the Adriatic port town of Ravenna. The self-styled country farmer was considered an outsider to the northern Italian elite, overshadowed by entrepreneurs such as Fiat SpA's Giovanni Agnelli and Olivetti's Carlo de Benedetti. All that has changed. "The farmer has become king," the influential daily Corriere della Sera said on Friday. "Gardini has grabbed the crown of Montedison with Napoleonic boldness, leaving the backstage of agro-industry for the second-highest seat of Italian capitalism."

Ferruzzi, Montedison's biggest shareholder, said on Thursday that it planned to replace Mr. Schimberni with Mr. Gardini at a board meeting on Dec. 4 because it wanted a larger management role. Many analysis believe that the effort will succeed. Rumors flourished of a feud between the two men over the past year as Ferruzzi built up its stake in Montedison to about 40 percent. In the past two years, Mr. Gardini has turned Ferruzzi into one of Europe's biggest commodities groups with annual sales of about $10 billion.

Ferruzzi, Italy's second-biggest private industrial company after Fiat, is now a major international player in the sugar, cereals and oil seeds businesses. With Montedison, it controls the world's minth-largest chemicals group. Mr. Gardini plans to give the group more of a global dimension next year when he seeks listings on leading world stock exchanges.

Yet many analysts say Mr. Gardini will face a stiff challenge in managing the Ferruzzi-Montedison empire. "Montedison recently bit off more than it could chew financially, and I'm not sure that Gardini is the man to put it right," said Stuart Wamsley, an analyst at Morgan Stanley International in London.

Mr. Schimberni, 64, the son of a barber from Rome, has shaken up Italy's discreet and close-knit financial in the light of the son of a barber from Rome, has shaken up Italy's discreet and close-knit financial in the light of the son of a barber from Rome, has shaken up Italy's discreet and close-knit financial. establishment more than any other figure in the last two years. He took over as bead of Montedison in 1980, when the then state-controlled group was running annual losses of almost $500 million.

He quickly turned to the industrial clite, families such as the Agnellis and Pirellis, to buy out the state's interest in Montedison. Mr. Schimberni shuffled Montedison's management, recruiting several executives from multinational companies and radically restructuring its businesses.

After the company returned to profitability in 1985, Mr. Schimberni began a bold expansion plan, mostly through acquisitions in the chemical and pharmaceuticals sectors. The group piled up a mountain of debt.

Mr. Schimberni irritated the financial establishment and some of Montedison's own shareholders in 1985. and 1986 with secret stock market takeovers, rarities in Italy. Ironically, Mr. Schimberni's company fell victim to just such a raid from Ferruzzi in late 1986 and early 1987. Analysts saw it as a blow to his aim of keeping Montedison an Italian anomaly, a company owned by small investors.

Commenting on Mr. Schimberni's ouster, Eugenio Scalfari, editor of La Repubblica, said: "A rupture of these dimensions, which fractures vertically a complex system of alliances built with much difficulty, is not a small trauma. If it's not an earthquake, it's pretty close."

U.S. Purchasers Say Economy Is Still Growing

New York Times Service NEW YORK - The U.S. industrial economy continued to grow in November despite the stock market's collapse, according to a report by purchasing managers for publi-cation on Monday. Production and new orders in-row, although at a slightly lower pace than reported in October, the National Association of Purchasing Management said. Employment rose for the eighth creased for the 11th month in a consecutive month, although only slightly, according to a survey of 250 purchasing managers, largely in heavy manufacturing.

In a separate report also showing strength in the economy, the Na-tional Machine Tool Builders' Association said that orders for U.S.made machine tools surged 46.2 percent in October over the previous month, to $267.3 million. Analysts said that orders for machine tools, power-driven devices that cut or shape metal parts, typi-cally pick up in the autumn, but noted that the October orders, a 48.4 percent jump over the same

The October figures represent the largest amount of orders so far Commenting on the purchasing managers' report, Robert J. Bretz, chairman of the association's Business Survey Committee, said, "For the near future at least, the stock market decline has had only a minor impact on the economy.

"Virtually all indicators remain positive. While the growth rate is off slightly from October, the economy continues to grow. This sig-nals a strong fourth quarter to end the fifth year of the recovery."

The purchasing managers' com-posite index of the major components of the survey, new orders, production, vendor deliveries, inventories and employment, stood at 58.9 percent this month. That is down somewhat from October's 61.8 percent, which had been the index's highest point since December of 1983.

A reading below 50 percent would generally mean that the economy is declining, and might even augur a recession; readings above 50 percent indicate a generally expanding economy According to Mr. Bretz, who is director of purchasing for Pitney Bowes Inc., the purchasing index has averaged 57.3 percent for the first 11 months of 1987.

"Based on past experience, if this average were to continue in De-cember, it would be consistent with real GNP growth of 4 percent for 1987," he said. Gross national product measures a country's total output of goods and services.

Still, the purchasers' survey showed that 53 percent feel it is too soon to tell whether the stock market plunge will have an impact on their companies' future business.

About 31 percent of purchasing managers expected no change in business at all, while 6 percent predicted a moderate increase. Only 10 percent of the buyers predicted a moderate decrease in business from the depressed state of stocks.

Despite Gulf Troubles. West Is Confident on Oil

Huge Stocks Lessen Fears of Disruption

By Youssef M. Ibrahim New York Times Service

PARIS - New conditions affecting world oil supplies have put the industrial countries in a position to withstand even a major dis-ruption of the flow of petroleum from the Gulf, according to senior officials in the United States and other Western countries. Unlike the shocks to Western economies when Middle Eastern crude was withheld from world markets in 1973 and 1979, Western industrialized countries today could draw on billions of barrels of oil stored in the United States, Western Europe and Japan, as well as a large amount of unused oiling capacity in countries

U.S. officials have said they increased the number of U.S. naval asels in the Gulf this year to assure that the flow of oil is not interrupted. However, the buildup of U.S. and other Western naval

As of Nov. 1, the 24 countries of emergency. the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development, which include the Western democracies and Japan, had 3.3 billion barrels 150 million, the agency said.

This is enough to supply all 24 countries for 97 days at present rates of consumption. That is strikingly different, many analysts said, from the days of the 1973 Arab oil embargo, and the Iranian revolu-tion, which interrupted the flow of about 6 million barrels of Iranian oil a day in 1979.

Based on strategic studies and the experience of the Iran-Iraq war, many officials believe that a major disruption could not outlast the 97 days of reserves. They said that countries such as Nigeria, Mexico and Venezuela with unused production capacity would be quick to Algerian Doubts on Prices take advantage of the sudden increase in demand for oil.

Furthermore, if the disruption were confined to Gulf tanker traffic. the Western countries would also continue to get Middle Eastern oil from an increasing flow through greater than anything we have seen in 1973 and 1979."

He said that the United States holds about 540 million barrels of the West's emergency reserves in its Strategic Petroleum Reserve. U.S. and other Western officials said that this situation had thwarted Iran's apparent hope that its attacks against Kuwait's oil facilities would add to the disarray in Western financial markets.

Instead, oil prices have remained nearly steady, at $18 to $20 a barrel over the past 12 months, even as the level of military activity in the Gulf sharply increased.

the attacks on tankers in the Gulf. on oil facilities in Kuwait, Iran and Iraq, and threats of further disturbances have failed to push oil prices up over the last three years. The contrast with the 1970s is striking. At that time, even rumors of damage to a Middle East oil facility would send prices soaring. forces has also been explained in political and military terms: to other members of the International maintain Western influence in walso become active and to reassure Arab countries.

Moreover, the Umited States and other members of the International Energy Agency, which was created by the West and Japan in 1974 to deal with oil shortages, have put into effect a plan to share oil in an

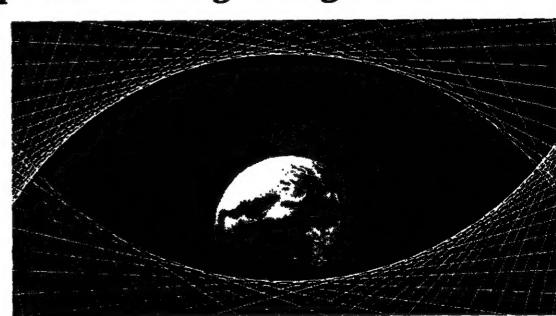

The effort to build up stocks was enormously aided by the discovery in the mid-1970s of important supplies in Western Europe, centered in the North Sea, and major discoveries in Alaska, the agency said.

Altogether, the agency estimated, the flow of oil through the Gulf and the Strait of Hormuz has fallen from 19 million barrels a day in 1979 to between 7 million and 7.5 million barrels a day today. In 1979, this oil represented 36 percent of the non-Communist world's supply, but today the share has dropped to 16 percent.

head of the country's most powerful employers' organization, the Keidanren, exercises influence on par with the finance minister or central bank governor. As a new government takes shape in Tokyo, faced with the challenge of adapting policies to reflect Japan's growing power in the international economy, Mr. Saito spoke in Tokyo with John Vinocur, executive editor of the IHT. Mr. Saito's remarks were made through an interpreter.

Q. Where do you think the dollar and yen will stabilize and how long a period of time will it take to get to that stabilization? A. This is a very often-asked question and nobody can answer it on any firm economic ground, because a question of this sort, we feel is 50 percent economic and 50 percent psychological.

O. Let me move in a more fruitful direction, then. At what level - dollar/yen do Japanese industries begin to hurt? A. Again, the answers are relative. In September 1985, the exchange rate was 260 yen to the dollar. It went to 200 and to 210, and I remember we used to say that 200 and 210 was as far as we could go and tolerate it, economically. But then the yen started going up to 180 and 150. That's the latest thinking on the ultimate level of exchange rate that we can tolerate.

For some Japanese, Eishiro Saito, as

Q. But you've been living with 135/140, allowing foreign builders to participate in and from this fact can we conclude that particular construction projects of that currency rates are simply not the solution to the trade imbalance. A. Well, I agree with you. Currency alignment is not the only way. It has to be coupled with other efforts of that nature. especially in terms of strengthening the competitiveness of American industry of better price and better quality, which of course does not mean that there are not areas where Japan should not do its own homework, like encouraging imports. Q. Let me take another example: the construction projects in Japan. What's your position on American firms' involvement in those projects?

A. Well, I realize that the United States has been demanding, asking some kind of a reciprocal arrangement involving public works projects. But Japan's position is that this program must first be worked out by having the United States, Japan and other countries come to the table and devise some rules for this program.

Q. Americans would answer: That's a dodge. How do you react to that?

A. Well, I think it is wrong to say that such positions by the Japanese government are "a dodge" or "evasion of the issues." But as far as the United States is concerned, each state has different rules and regulations

We have made every effort to try to increase imports from abroad to solve the problem of trade imbalance. Even in construction, if there are non-Japanese industries that are more efficient than we are, then let them come in. And at the same time, the United States should do its own homework as well to make its industries more efficient and improve competitive-

Q. Given the dollar's current weakness, how do you regard the continuation of capital flows from Japan to the United States in long-term investment? Do you think they are going to decline?

A. All I can say is that it does not look right for the United States to continue to depend very largely on overseas funds to linance its continuing budget deficit. It first must direct all its efforts and resources to resolving two basic problems bothering the econo-my: the deepening of the federal budget deficit and the still-aggravating trade imhalance.

Q. Japanese industry seems to proceed quietly in its relationship with European countries that have strong tariff barriers or other protection practices that exclude, for example, Japanese cars or television sets, Yet you are vocal, aggressive in relation to enforce agreements reached through inter-the United States, which is almost a bazaar vention in the currency market.

— where anyone can walk in. Why is there this distance?

A. I don't think Japan is vocal or as loudmouthed as you seem to think in relation to the United States. On the contrary, it is America that is more loudmouthed and vocal against us. We have already discussed exchange-rate questions. What is most crucial, in particular in stabilizing foreign exchange rates, is coordination, collaboration and cooperation between and among Japan, the United States and the European countries. This is why I feel very strongly that if a meeting of the Group of Five nations or Group of Seven nations is to be reconvened, all the countries need first to build a secure-enough consensus to coordinate their policies. If the next meeting is going to end up inconclusively be-cause this necessary prior consensus is not there, then we might end up with another major, catastrophic market crash.

Q. More specifies, please. When you're talking about coordination, cooperation, what do we do specifically?

A. What I am saying is very much in line with the sort of things that came out of the Venice economic summit meeting, i.e., Surveillance of the performance of economic policies so that there is no major digression from what is agreed upon in terms of exchange rate, etc. To put it more bluntly, these participating countries should try to

But the exercise was expensive: The company offered investors the right to redeem the 15-year sterling bond after five years for a yield of 9½ percent — a balfpoint above the current yield on British government paper.

This option appealed to the current defensive attitude of investors, who would like to hold equities but are reluctant because of the curren raising $100 million which will be swapped into floating-rate dollars and then into sterling. Gervacio Takes Junior Featherweight Title

SAN JUAN, Puerto Rico (AP) - Julio Gervacio of the Dominican Republic stripped American Louie Espinoza of the World Boxing Association junior featherweight title on a unanimous 12-round decision here Saturday. Gervacio, 20, has a record of 15 victories, no losses and two draws. Espinoza suffered his second defeat against 25 successes.

In Port-of-Spain, Trinidad, Donny Lalonde of Canada knocked out American Eddie Davis in the second round of a scheduled 12-rounder Friday to claim the vacant World Boxing Council light heavyweight title. The two fought for the title vacated when Thomas Hearns stepped down to the middleweight ranks.

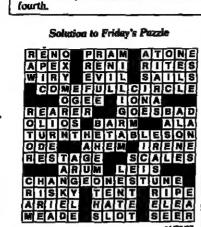

Lalonde, 27, is the first Canadian in 61 years to win a light heavyweight title. His record stands at 30-2; Davis, top-ranked in the division coming into the fight, is 38-6.

Howard University's Playoff Bid Is Rejected

WASHINGTON (AP) - A federal judge on Friday denied Howard University's WASHINGTON (Ar)—A teneral lange on rhasy defined Howard onversity is request that the Division I-AA playoff games be halted while Howard sues the National Collegiate Athletic Asociation over its exclusion from postseason play. Howard claimed its 9-1 team was illegally excluded from the playoffs and that the predominantly black school, which has a record better than any other in the playoffs, was racially discriminated against. Howard said it would pursue its suit seeking damages from the NCAA.

Wolf skied the one-mile (1,610-meter) Kandahar course in 1 minute, 16.64 seconds. Yugoslav Mateja Svet was second in 1:16.69 and Sylvia Eder of Austria third in 1:17.70 on a forested run that dropped 528 yards (482.80 meters).

Tomba was third-fastest in Sunday's first run and second-fastest in the second down the Kandahar track to clock a winning aggregate, of 2 minutes, 19.51 seconds.

Stenmark, a 31-year-old Swede and the biggest World Cup winner with 85 triumphs in a 14-year career, was the runner-up, nine-hundredths of a second behind Tomba. Joel Gaspoz helped save the rep-utation of the Swiss team by cap-turing third place in 2:19.77. He skied the fastest second heat (1:06.94) to improve on a disap-pointing first run. Amsterdam

The Amsterdam stock market was virtually stable last week. The ANP general index lost 2.9 points on the week to close at 213.3, against 216.2 the previous Ftiday.

The U.S. budget agreement and lower interest rates in the Netherlands, West Germany and France were seen as important signals, but many analysts said the U.S. action was too late and did not go far enough.

Kempen & Co, brokerage said prices would stabilize at present levels.

Frankfurt

The agreement on the U.S. budget deficit helped the tone on the Frankfurt stock exchange last week, and the Commerzbank index gained 33.9 points on the week to close at

J.359.6, up 2.6 percent.
Volume rose slightly on the eight West German stock exchanges to 9.32 billion DM, against 8.56 billion the previous week. Blue chips made good advances for the week, with Dairnler up 20 and Siemens up

Hong Kong Average daily turnover on the Hong Kong stock market slumped to 840 million Hong Kong dollars last week, well down on the previous week's 1.15 billion dollars.

The Hang Seng index dropped 72.99 points Monday, but the index finished at 2,194.18 on Friday, down 20.52 from the previous week.

The market rose slightly Monday morning because of the U.S. budget agreement, but speculation that an appreciation of the Hong Kong dollar against the U.S. dollar might be location of the transfer and analysis series. looming reversed the trend, analysts said.

The Financial Times 30-share index ended 22.7 points up on the previous week, and the Financial Times-Stock Exchange 100-share index up 18.2 points.

Shares moved shead on the U.S. budget agreement, a survey by the Confederation of British Industry showing confidence in the economy, strong trade figures and cuts in interest rates by several European countries. How-ever, that was offset by the dollar's relapse, putting heavy pressure on such internationals as ICI and Glaxo.

Milan

Shrugging off several weeks of gloom, Milan stocks surged last week, and the Milan Stock Exchange index rose 6.95 percent over the previous week to close at 739 points. The biggest buying stimulus came from Montedison, whose chief executive, Mario Schimberni, was replaced by the head of the Ferruzzi group, Raul Gardini, who is Monte-dison's biggest shareholder. Montedison's shares rose 5 percent over the week.

Paris

Paris stock prices rose moderately last week in quiet trading, but analysts said the mood was pessimistic at the end of the week.

The CAC index finished the week at 296.5, against 285.5 the previous Friday.

Analysts said that the dollar's continuing weakness, lack of a meeting by the Group of Seven major industrial countries and Japan's determination not to lower its discount rate prevented a stronger rally.

Prices on the Tokyo Stock Exchange rose for a second week, with the Nikkei average recovering the 23,000-yen level for the first time since Nov. 4.

However, prices fell heavily in thin trading on Saturday on gloomy overnight news from Wall Street, and the Nickei declined 216.39 yen to close the week at 23,052,23 yen, for a total gain of 346.67. Analysts said the next few weeks' trends would depend on whether the Group of Seven industrial nations meets shortly.

Zurich

Prices were irregular on the Zurich stock market last week. The Credit Suisse index rose marginally to 444.8, from 438.6 the previous Friday, and the Swiss Bank Corp. index. to 493.8 from 489.6.

Analysts were cautious about near-term prospects, saying much would depend on the PARIS - Low stock prices are prompting French companies not only to launch defensive stock buy-backs, but also to consider mergers and other capital restructurings before the dismantling of European financial barriers in

Share analysts said internal moves to strengthen capital against outsiders would probably be supported by a parallel govern-ment effort to prevent underdeveloped industrial sectors from hostile takeovers as the market opens up.

"The current low stock prices provide an opportunity which probably will not come again," said Edouard Cointreau, an analyst. Mr. Cointreau, who heads a private industrial consulting group, added, "we are going to see more consolidation, in line with long-term strategies, as companies prepare for 1992 when they have to face up to European competi-

Aggressive takeover bids, such as that launched last month by the Italian commodities empire, Gruppo Ferruzzi, against the sugar and edible oils company, Saint Louis, are driving French groups to make such moves.

The top-ranking French companies are the most attractive to raiders and that means the attacker has to be a powerful group with a lot of stamina, one analyst said. In late October, Ferruzzi announced it had taken a 6 percent stake in Saint Louis. Within two weeks, it raised that to almost 14 percent through purchases on the open market. Saint Louis, reluctant to be part of the global strategy of the Ferruzzi chairman, Raul Gar-dini, retaliated quickly to the first threat by increasing its capital.

France would probably call in its new com-mission, for instance, if the latest takeover speculation, centering on the insurance indus-try, proves well-founded.

Analysts said more referrals could occur as the government, still protective of its major industries, tried to prevent foreign bids for its

On Tuesday, shares in the insurance group.
Compagnie du Midi, rose sharply on rumors of a bid by Allianz AG of West Germany, Midi denied the rumors and Allianz declined comment, but Midi shares rose 91 francs ($1.61) to 946 on Tuesday and added another 10 francs Thursday.

Analysts said they would be surprised if the government allowed the acquisition, since the government is aware that the insurance sector is underdeveloped

For this reason, the government has been careful not to float its three nationalized insurance groups early in the privatization program. before they were ready. The collapse in stock prices eventually caused a postponement of the December flotation of the largest. Union des Assurances de Paris.

Susanna Hardy, an analyst with the London brokers, James Capel, said: "There's a fear the if France opens up more, the way Germany for example has an open economy, they will be railroaded, because they don't have the strength behind their currency and their industry hasn't yet pulled itself out of the late 1970s and early 1980s."

The Perimeter of the Prodigious Solzhenitsyn

By Charles Trueheart Washington Pust Service

AVENDISH, Vermont —

Windy Hill Road, just beyond the gash of the power lines and the graveyard in the hillside. Alexander Solzhemisyn's perimeter fence begins. Every few yards, painted signs declare private property, brook no trespassing. At the gate, a camera's eye is vigilant.

Soviet Russia's most prominent exile bought and fortified this 50acre estate in 1976. The Nobel laureate's expulsion from Moscow two years before, and the erratic movements and blunt pronouncements in the West that followed. had turned him into journalistic flypaper. Today, though his nov-elty has worn off, Solzhenitsyn is still belenguered, not just by the remnants of a curious press, but by rubberneckers and well-wishers and assorted pilgrims. But he must husband his time. Solzhenitsyn will turn 70 next year. He does not consider it luck that he survived the privations of Stalin's labor camps or that he vanquished a harsh cancer 30 years ago. But he knows his mission to warn the world against communism does not carry an indefinite term. He has work to do.

The year he moved to Cavendish, in a conversation with one of his publishers. Solzhenitsyn ob-served that he had set the action of his novels in closed institutions labor camps in "One Day in the Life of Ivan Denisovich," a prison research facility in "The First Cirnot to mention "The Gulag Archipelago" — because he had spent so much of his life in confinement. It is the world he knows. Years later, a free man in the land of the free, he has chosen a confinement of his own making.

Westerners, and certainly Americans, thought they knew the living myth who settled among them: the resilient survivor of Stalinist slavery and Brezhnevian repression; the authentic voice of the Russian heartland and expo-nent of its folkways; the visionary David poised against the clumsy Goliath of the Soviet lie.

Once he was clasped to the Western bosom, however, more discomfiting truths were added.

High above town along ously indifferent to the Soviet menace. He was a monarchist of sorts, a reactionary, a mystic.

> That he has been misunderstood, repeatedly, is certain. Referring recently to the news media and those interested parties who speak through them, he said: "They lie about me as they would about a dead man." He has, it is true, achieved the misty stature of the departed. Even though his output continues to be prodigious, he is more remembered than read > — and remembered as much for what he endured as for what he wrote, or writes.

It has been suggested that, if Mikhail Gorbachev means what he says, the work of Alexander Solzhenitsyn might be published in the Soviet Union for the first time in more than two decades and he might return.

"I cannot go back before my books," Solzhenitsyn said recent-ly, in the lofty and peremptory manner the world has come to expect. "First the books must return, then me."

Meanwhile Russians can hear Solzhenitsyn himself. In mid-October, for the second time since he settled in the United States, he spent two days taping selections from "March 1917." Broken into 20-minute segments by the Voice of America, daily broadcasts of his animated narrations are reaching as many as 33 million seconds. ing as many as 33 million people inside the Soviet Union.

A Russian emigre who was a recent overnight visitor to the Solzhenitsyn estate describes the family quarters and the author's nearby office as a bustling place, an informal nerve center for the diaspora of Russian emigres in Europe and the United States. Phone calls are unremitting, and guests are common.
Natalia Solzhenitsyn, the au-

(The building also houses a library and a chapel, where a Rus-sian Orthodox priest from a near-by church conducts private reli-gious services for the family.)

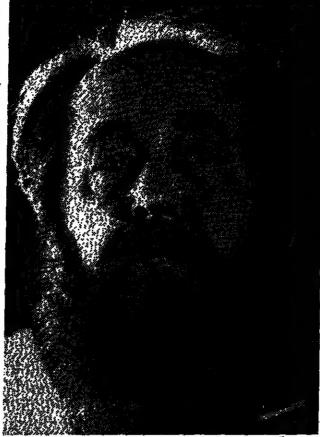

Solzhenitsyn's work in progress is the eight-volume history of the Russian revolution he calls "The Red Wheel." Like "Gulag," which he subtitled "an experiment in lit-erary investigation," the series is a kind of documentary fiction, combining historical research with the novelist's license of selectivity and juxtaposition.

The first installment, a portion of the first volume, appeared in 1972 as "August 1914." According to Roger Straus of Farrar, Straus & Giroux, U.S. publishers of the series, the full 1,000-page version of "Angust 1914." revised by the author and finally translat-ed to his liking, will appear in the United States next September.

English-language publication of the next volume ("October 1916," 1,200 pages) is at least a year and a half away, Straus says. The first half (1,500 pages) of the third volume, "March 1917," will follow the control of the column of the colu

Translation delays and the author's exacting stanand the sainth's exacting state dards are said to account for the substantial lag in English-lan-guage publication, although mea-ger sales of the volumes in Europe contribute to the patience of Sol-zhenitsyn's U.S. publisher. Meanwhile, Solzhenitsyn is said to be finishing "April 1917."

"The Red Wheel," however, is not the author's exclusive preoc-cupation. With the help of his wife, his mother-in-law and his sons (the older two, Ermolai, 16, and Ignat, 15, attended nearby public schools but now are study-ing in England; the youngest, Ste-pan, 14, is still at home), Solzheni-isyn has been amassing a vast archive of testimony about 20thcentury Russia.

"I cannot go back before my books."

World War II and the Stalin era, expulsion work "very hard to promising to publish the most sig-nificant of them as the "All-Russian Memoir Library." Hundreds of memoirs have been catalogued under the Solzhenitsyns' auspices. Together with a companion series on modern Russian history, the published materials have filled 16 volumes to date. Simon Michael Bessie, of Harper & Row, describes the first volume of "The Gulag Archipelago" as "a phenomenon. People certainly knew about the camps before the publication of 'Gulag' but 'Gulag' made it real and undeniable. By the time we got to volumes two and three, people felt they knew what they had to know Sales figures bear this out: Harper & Row printed more than 3 million copies, hardcover and paperback combined, of the first paperback commined, of the first volume (1974); fewer than 900,000 of the second (1975); and 120,000 of the third (1978). Bessie calls this "an irony" because the third volume, he says, is "the most accessible of the three." The same with the crid for "The Ock and might be said for "The Oak and the Calf." His partisans are quick to cite Solzhenitsyn's prescient use of glasnost and even perestroika words he did not invent, but whose current reformist implications he and other dissidents of the late 1960s helped define.

"There's a certain logic to it," says Peter Reddaway, who directs the Kennan Institute for Advanced Russian Studies in Washington. "Glamost is a term which, in a sense, means freedom of expression. The dissidents were ask-ing for something logical and a leader has come along who's pre-

In Search of the Old

By Gary Jennings N today's bookstores and librar-

I ies, you can get hold of just about any kind of dictionary, from the 12-volume-plus-supplements Oxford English to dictionaries of foreign languages and back-and-forth dictionaries (English-Swabili, Français-Esquiman, etc.) to dictionaries of slang, of computerese, of dirty words and even of multilingual insults. The one kind of dictiomary you cannot yet find — or I can't, anyway, and I would rush to buy the first one off the press — is what I might call an English-Olden-Archaic-Obsolet Dictionary. Or, to give it a catchier title, "What People Used to Call Things." I write novels, mostly historical ones, and I try hard to keep them accurate as to historical facts, milieu and flavor. When I was living in Mexico and writing a book called "Aztec," I had to make a deliberate effort to ignore a lot of the "typically Mexican landscape" around me — banana and citrus groves, roses and carnations, bur-ros and toros — because they did not exist in Mexico in the 15th century, the time of my book. I couldn't even have my narratorhero "crow" about anything good that happened to him; the barn-yard cock had not yet arrived from the Old World. But then it came to colors. Red, blue, green — those words don't have any extraneous and troublesome connotations. The word "or-ange," however, was inspired by the fruit of that color, and the Aztees had never seen one. (The word came into English from French, which got it from Italian, which got it from Late Latin, and so on back, ultimately to the Arabic, Persian and Sanskrit spoken in those lands and Sanskrit spoken in those lands where oranges first grew.)

I was living then in a Mexican town teeming with painters, sculptors, enamelists, potters and weavers of every nationality. So I went around to those who spoke English. Oranges first got to Britain about the year 1000, but of course the Britons had known the color since time immemorial. "Certainly the artists at least must have had a word for it," I said. "What did they call the color before they called it art even the most commonplace colors still have quaint old names (gules for red, sable for black, etc.).

There I found what I was looking for. The color orange was never much used in armorial bearings evidently not noble enough - but. when it was, it was called jacinth, after the gem of that hue.

Of course, innumerable words. or new usages of them, have come into the English language recently enough that most historical novelists know better than to use them in stories set in olden times. I doubt that any responsible novelist would use the word "sophisticated" to describe, say, Beau Brunneil though that character certainly was, in the sense of wordly, urbane. refined. However, "sophisticated" did not begin to be used in that sense until sometime late in the 19th century. In Brummell's time (1778-1840), the word meant false, adulterated, impure.

L COULD list hundreds of words I've come up against, in the course of my work, that did not exist in the era of which I was writing, and for which I never could find a suitably old-time, archaic or obsolete sub-

I am working now on a novel set indate Roman Empire times. I have before me an engraving of a Roman matron wearing her hair in what I immediately recognize as a "ponytail." It would be of some small help to me if I knew what the lady called her hairdo in Latin. It would be of more help if I could find out what her sisters in Britan-nia (who frequently wore the same coiffure) called it in the Anglo-Saxon of that day. Then I could at least make a stab at adapting the word into modern English. You would think that even the dimmest of the ancients would have recognized that hairdo as a ponytail; what better name could there be for it? But evidently, cuss em, none of them did. Not until English. Oranges first got to Britain about the year 1000, but of course the Britons had known the color since time immemorial. "Certainly the artists at least must have had a respectably into print.

Gary Jennings's books include "World of Words," published by Asheneum in 1984. William Safire is "orange?" The artists all looked be-mused, but no one knew.

Finally I thought to hunt up a book on heraldry, because in that
